SUNDAY APPEAL.

THE DEAD.

BY HARY & POPE. The regions of the Spirit-land Are populous and rich to me, While earth seems a deserted straud Washed by a wild, temultuous sea.

Long, long ago to my young eye It bloomed a meadow green and fair, O'er which the hours came dancing by With laughing eyes and sunny hair.

I danced with them, and every heart

In love responded to my own; But while I played my joyous part, Yet still the meadow sward was green, The bright-hued blossoms still were sweet

The cloudiess skies o'erspread the scene, Gay music lured the dancer's ceet; But strangers thronged the fatry bowers, Whose steps were fleeter than my own; And with the rosy-manticd hours

I see them dancing far away, But cannot join the mirthful band,-Bound by a spell, my feet will stray Along death's lonely desert strand

Danced by, and I was left alone

The billows of that boundless sea Make sweeter music to my ear Than Pies ure's wildest melody; For e'er it lies the Spirit-sphere.

And there at times Falth's eye can see Amid the amaranthine howers. The friends who danced in youth with me,

Growned with its never-fading flowers; Can hear their sweetly warbled songs Of that pure land's undying joya; And while my spirit for them longs, I cannot prize earth's glittering toys.

They beckon me with eyes of love, And then the billows smoothly flow. And with a cliv'ry cadence move In low sweet marmurs to and fro.

But when my yearning heart would gain Plunge in the bright and gentle tide; The black waves rise, and clouds again The blest shore from my vision hids

Yet still the echo of their song Comes wafted to me strangely sweet, White Memory's enchantments strong Chain to the strand my waiting feet.

There are on this descried shore A few fond hearts that love me yet; But we can laugh and dance no mor-As when in youth's bright hours we met The skies are blue above me still,

With sun and starlight's summer smile; The flowers are fair on glade and hill, We gently wander hand in hand.

And gase with wietful, longing eyes Across the wave to that blest land Where dwell the dead in Paradise, SAINT MARY'S. From the Galveston News.]

HARVEST.

BY MISS MOLLIE E. MOURE. Oh, silly Heart, in darkened rooms On, Sily Heart, in directed rooms
Moaning slore s lid weeping.
A paintini watch o'er baffled hopes
And wasted labors keeping.
Come out across the eastward slopes,
Where country flowers are blowing.
To where the rows of ripened corn
Yellow as gold are glowing!

Mind you, dear Heart, that gloomy day In bicas and windy weather, When on the self same stopes we stood, (They were barren then I together, o watch the forrows planted? Long And weary days have faded line ther, and bitter rains have been, and sales and storms o'ershaded, leas and windy weaths

But steadily the stender stalk. Shot up with leaf and thesel, Till wind and min its servants proved. And similight shone its vissel; Therich grain now hath graced repose. To perfect fullness stilling; h, dear, dear Heart, the nore hes near: After off the fulfilling!

Between, the tolls and tumults lie, The toars and the heart-westing.
And to the last, oft-time the good
Is hid to which we're bastening.
But surery, as the harvest-time
Fulfills the time of planting.
So surely calming draughts will come
To soms a-toil and panting!

As in the bulb the flower appears To microscopic viscon, in to-day's blind labor dwells to-morrow's sweet Elysian! i, Heart, come out of darkened rooms: Se patient, brave and widing.

For hope is fair, (though toll is sad,) And blessed the faifilling!

It would seem, therefore, that Certificates have been in existence, and the Masters of Lodges have been authorized to demand them as evidence of regular initiation, for two hundred years. The general rule in this country and in Europe, is concisely stated by the Dep.
